

BOSNIAN VALLEY OF THE PYRAMIDS

George E Moss

October 2013.

There are five pyramids, one tumulus and an astounding tunnel complex with chambers and artefacts that have been discovered thus far. The Bosnian Pyramid of the Sun is the largest (220 meters) and oldest pyramid known to our world. The labyrinth complex extends for more than ten miles. Excavation work began in 2005 and it is of course astonishing that this wonderful knowledge should continue to be ignored by regular time-honoured Press and TV news channels. Our tour began at a point 2.9 km due south of the Pyramid of the Sun, at the entrance to the labyrinth.

1. Dr Semir Osmanagich points towards the distant Bosnian Pyramid of the Sun. The pyramid is exactly due north from this point, the entrance to the tunnel labyrinth.

2. Having been supplied with hard hats we duck into the labyrinth entrance. Maria from Hanover waves. Word of the project is getting around. We met individuals and parties from: Germany, France, Spain, Italy, Switzerland, Bulgaria, South America, Canada, Japan, Vietnam, Hawaii and UK. It was a joy to see so much interest from afar.

3. Ceramic artefact (K-2) is described in the notice below:

4. K-2 details, and there are two bluish energy orbs above.

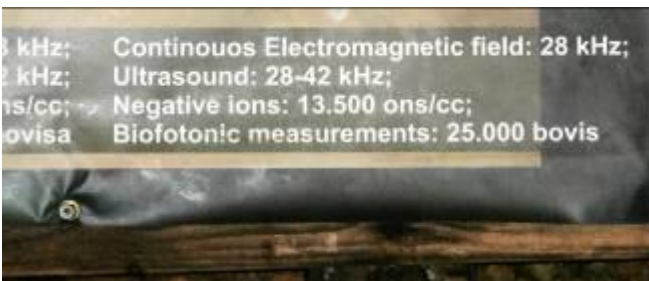

5. A poster depicts K-2 as a place for meditation. It is most certainly a very good energy at this location.

6. Further into the tunnel and more energy orbs.

7. Our guide Emil draws attention to where carefully laid dry stone walling blocks off one of many side tunnels. The blocking off of many side tunnels and chambers happened much later than pyramid construction—about 5,000 years ago.

8. A notice describes the very interesting atmospheric properties within the labyrinth. The ultrasound is beyond our hearing range, but we understand that dogs hear and become disorientated. Negative ion concentration keeps air and water pure—free from bacteria and viruses. The subterranean sourced water is pure and drinkable. A standardised dowsing procedure is used for obtaining biophotonic values. The measurements indicate that at some locations the spiritual energy values are very high compared to, for example, a Tibetan temple.

9. We got wet and dirty in dark, part-excavated tunnels.

10. Must get fresh trousers before dining at the hotel! Moving on to Vratnica Tumulus—this is of layered construction, as is Silbury Hill, and a little higher:

11. Rock layers are massive with clay between. Core drilling indicates two substantial concrete layers beneath and three meters of air space between, suggesting a chamber.

12. Some layered rock slabs weigh up to 20-tons.

13. A curious feature is that 3-4 cm of a different rock has been fused onto the upper surface of the rock layers. The photo shows where the layer has been chipped away,

14. On top of the Vratnica Tumulus.

15. This poster shows the general site layout. We entered the labyrinth at location 6. We have visited the tumulus at 8. Next, we shall go to the Pyramid of the Sun at location 1.

16. There it is and we shall walk from this street to the top.

17. A winding road brings us to Sanela's café and welcome respite within just a few hundred meters of the apex.

18. At the top—bees, butterflies and flowering scabious.

19. To the north is the town of Visoko where our trek began. We could have taken a taxi as far as the café!

20. To the south are the structures named 'Pyramid of the Love' and the 'Temple of Mother Earth'

Excavation at the pyramid apex is currently not permitted on account of a 10th century fortification being there.

21. The fort remains are on the south edge of the apex. All four elevations of the pyramid have been faced with substantial concrete blocks—not immediately evident since nature has since taken over with soil deposition, scrub vegetation and pine forest. If we now move to a much lower level of the northern face we can see where the damaged concrete block face has been exposed.

22. Damaged concrete facing that nature has since covered.

23. Massive concrete work—45° slope.

24. More concrete and nature competing.

25. Continuing down steps in the 45° slope back to town. The concrete has been tested by scientific institutions in Bosnia, Italy and France. It is described as vastly superior to modern concrete in terms of its hardness, moisture absorption, and indeed its lasting quality. Organic material (leaf) sandwiched between concrete layers has been radiocarbon dated to 29,200 years +/- 400 years. So the pyramid is ancient, with character and details of construction that go well beyond human capability and human intellect.

HOW, WHY AND BY WHOM? The first task of any physical mission by extraterrestrials to this planet has always been to build a pyramid—an energy device that provides all energy needs whilst they are here. They build using own ET spiritual science methods, often assisted by local humans of sufficient spiritual development to understand.
